On 2 February he had heard his father William "declare on his deathbed that Temperance Lloyd After the man, John Dunning, had left the Guildhall without giving evidence Jones elaborated on what she claimed to have heard: that Trembles asked Edwards how she had become a witch, and Edwards had replied that a man wearing clothes "all of black" had offered that she would never be in want if only she did one thing for him – and that when she asked what, in God's name, that might be, the man vanished. Hence both Germany and Switzerland each a patchwork of small political entities and divided between Catholics and Protestants, witnessed more witch trials than did France or Spain.

In the 20th Century, a woman suspected of being a witch was buried in this way in Pittenweem Parish Church and Tolbooth where some of the accused witches were held and tortured. In most articles she is merely an afterthought in the last lines.
