We know there is an iceberg there, but we are no longer exactly sure of its size, contours and colour. We observe the beginnings of the recreation process in the following excerpt from Hoffman – : All around me, the Babel of American voices, hardy midwestern voices, sassy New York voices, quick youthful voices, voices arching under the pressure of various crosscurrents.

Human history is in part the story of the ways different cultural groups have interacted. His students consisted primarily of French, German and British students. The same idea can be applied to different organisational and professional cultures: through studying together – in effect, time spent together on a joint undertaking – individuals from different professional and organisational groups can gain a better understanding of different professional cultures.

We will analyse the particular aspects of non-verbal communication belonging to different cultures. Al. My co-interactants assumed that a Black male would be
