OJIN is a peer-reviewed, online publication that addresses current topics affecting nursing practice, research, education, and the wider health care sector. Over the last few years, evidence-based practice has become a standard expectation of Western health care systems, rather than a topic whose value is debated by clinicians. Correlations between licensure, outcomes, and interventions.

Our multidisciplinary team examined published regulatory data to inform a review of position statements on home birth from professional colleges. MISS scores also correlated with density of midwives and access to care across birth settings. Sample midwifery integration indicators and weighted scores.
