We had wanted to stay in the Hacienda for a while anyway because of its historical significance, and this turned out one of those opportunities that just worked out and we went with it. You will notice several stone figures and carvings in the shape of a snake.

The phenomenon that El Castillo is famous for occur twice each year, at the spring and autumn equinoxes. After all of the work was completed, an entryway was cut into the balustrade of the northeastern exterior staircase to provide access to tourists.

Snake carvings at the base of the northern staircase of El Castillo in Chichen Itza started snapping photos from every angle, even managing to elbow my way through the crowds and get a few photos without cut off heads in the foreground. Skywatchers Rev.
